bend in the river

Brookdale Drive

A residential street in the section called Rancho Canada. It runs more or less parallel to and just north of the Carmel River. The name was selected by the developer as attractive and appropriate because of its relationship to the stream.

Buckeye Canyon, Ridge, Hill

Buckeye Canyon is the small ravine that runs down to the Carmel River from the north on the east side of Rancho Tierra Grande and Mid-Valley Center.

It was so named because it had many California Buckeye trees growing in it. This tree, which has striking white flowers in the spring and bears large, chestnut-like nuts, is notable for losing its leaves early in the summer and remaining bare or nearly so much of the year.

Buckeye Ridge (highest point 2,737 feet) stands on the northern portion of the old Tularcitos land grant, at the head of Sycamore Gulch. It is separated from Burned Mountain by the canyon of Rana Creek. The name undoubtedly stems from the presence of Buckeyes on its slopes.

There is also a Buckeye Hill (altitude 2,541 feet) standing some distance to the southeast of Burned Mountain and just east of the Hastings Natural History Reservation. Like the other features, its name can surely be attributed to the Buckeye tree.

Burned Mountain

Rises on the northeastern part of the old Tularcitos Rancho, (altitude 2,846 feet) between Rana and Agua Mala creeks.

Its name was undoubtedly given as the result of a grass or forest fire which left a burned appearance for some time. It is, however, unique in California, in that other features in the state named for the results of fires are generally called "burnt" rather than "burned".

Cachagua Creek, Valley

Cachagua Creek is one of the principal tributaries of the Carmel River, which it joins near Prince's Camp to the south of Tularcitos Ridge and just below Los Padres Dam. Cachagua Creek is formed by the junction near Jamesburg of Conjo, Finch and James creeks.

The origin of the name is uncertain. A popular version has it that the work is Indian and means something like "Hidden Waters," because the stream is not easily visible in the valley. However, knowledge of the local Indian languages is extremely limited, and there seems to be no concrete evidence to support this theory.

Professor Gudde (California Place Names) suggests that an early map-maker might have garbled the words "Canada" and "ojo de agua" appearing on a "diseno" (sketch map) of Los Tularcitos Rancho and come out with "Cachagua", but he also points out that "cachagua" is a Mexican word meaning "sewer" or "gutter", and this seems the most likely source of the name.

Still another possible origin was turned up, however, in the fall of 1974 when a map dated Dec. 8, 1883 was found on the Featherbow Ranch in the Cachagua Valley. It showed a Gacho Agua Creek, which could easily have been corrupted by Anglo-Saxons into Cachagua. The Spanish word "gacho" as an adjective means "turned down" or "bent downward," while as a noun, "gacha," it is feminine and means a very thin, watery sort of porridge. Neither seems to fit the present case too well, but there may be a missing link that would make the connection clear.

El Caminito (El Cammito)

Originally a short road in Carmel Valley Village running north off Carmel Valley Road to Airway Road (now Via Contenta). The name, given by the developer, Byington Ford, is Spanish for "Little Road." Subsequently, someone's error resulted in incorrectly spelled street signs, which now read "El Cammito." The road presently resumes on the northern side of the airstrip and climbs nearly to the top of the ridge.

Camp Steffani, Steffani Avenue

A small residential section just east of Carmel Valley Village on the northeast bank of the river. Steffani Avenue is one of the three streets that it comprises.

Professor Gudde reports (in California Place Names): "Joseph Steffani, a native of Switzerland, settled here about 1888 and later subdivided part of his two-thousand acre ranch for summer homes. The original name, Camp Carmel, was changed to the present name in 1910."

It was a dark, chilly Saturday night at Ram Tap Spring Horse Trials at Fresno. The cross country riders, softly moaning, were all tucked snugly in their sleeping bags by mothers and others. The camp followers were finishing up the dishes and trying to keep their teeth from chattering by huddling over the garbage fire. Occasionally the characteristic cry of the night blooming key bird was heard. ("Key...key...key...riced! It's cold!")

But wait! What's that flashlight flitting around the horses? Can it be...no! We don't believe it! Who or what would you expect to see standing in the dark muck of the horse corral with a friend to hold the flashlight? Who, but the gung-ho horselover?

And what is this solid gold nut doing at 10 p.m. in a biting wind? Ah sunlight fades, Nader's Raider's raid, and the gung-ho horseman braids!

Comes the dawn and with it, or even preceeding it, many more of the brave, the bright, the brilliant, the brassy braiders are breathing hot breath on their benumbed fingers, while brooding about breakfast.

By 8 a.m. when the horse show begins, we hardly recognize the impeccable riders and their gleaming horses as the same scruffy lot we came camping with. Wow! Clothes do a lot more than just cover up competitors. And with their beautifully braided manes and tails it's hard to tell the $200 horsie from the $2000 horsie.

You may have thought braiding was only for rugs and band uniforms but it signifies more than just pretty pigtails on a pony.

It keeps the cotton picking mane out of the way for one thing. This can be a life saver when you drop your rein in the middle of the jump course. You can pick it right up again instead of picking up a handful of non-steerable hair.

Hot horses stay hot and wet longer under manes. Braiding is a sweat saver. Braiding is a mark of respect for the judge. It shows you care enough to turn out your very best. After all, it's not as if it cost any money to do.

About a week before braiding, pull the horse's mane to about the length and thickness of a baby's bangs. Do this by back combing small sections with a metal mane comb. Take the few long hairs left hanging, brace them against the comb and the proper length and yank! The horse hardly says "ouch" but for kindness, on a heavy mane, do a little every day.

Do not remove any hair from the horses tail and pray that the horse doesn't either. Now assemble:

1. A halter and rope. A horse must be tied up short for this job.
2. If you are small or your horse is tall, you'll need a box or chair to stand on.
3. A bucket of water and a brush to dampen the mane and tail.

4. Some thick thread as near to the horse's mane and tail color as possible. Crapet or button thread works well. Yarn is no good.

5. A mane comb and scissors.

6. A packing or yarn needle with its sharp point filed blunt.

Braiding should be done shortly before showing. Braids are itchy. Left alone, the horse will try to rub the braids out.

Dampen the mane and divide it from the forelock, evenly into eight sections. You may use rubberbands to temporarily hold the sections. Use more sections and braid more tightly on horses with thick necks.

Put the needle through your shirt for storage and stuff the dangling thread safely inside your clothing.

Braid a section right down to the end and tie it with the tread which is doubled through the needle. Then bring the needle up through the base of the braid near the horse's skin. This pulls the end of the braid under to form a loop. Next you run the needle through the bottom end of that loop and double the braid under again. Stitch the bottom of the loop to the base of the braid and then wrap the whole thing around the base a couple of times with thread. Knot the thread on the underside and cut off the extra. If there are many loose hairs sticking out, rebraid. If there are only a few, pull them out. Try not to trim the finished braid with scissors; you'll regret the short ends next time you braid.

The last two braids nearest the withers should be made a little slacker than the others to allow the horse to stretch his neck.

Sometimes people try to finish their braids with rubber bands using a bailing wire hook to reach through and draw them up for snug doubling. This ain't got no class. Forget it. Sewn in braids are where it's at.

We have also seen braids wrapped with adhesive tape as a sort of braid-aid. Possibly this is all right for horses who pull beer wagons.

Yarn is gosh darn for hunter braids. For one thing you can't pull it tight enough to get a really elegant tenny tiny braid. For another your horse is apt to look like a case of the red and green uglies.

The forelock is braided into one little stubby braid. Judicious trimming with electric slippers cleans up the brow beaten look.

For the tail, dampen thoroughly. Start braiding as high up the horse's tail as possible. Take three tiny strands of hair from the underside of the tail; two from one side, one from the other. Bring them over the top of the rest of the loose hair on the horse's tail to the center when you do two-thirds of a complete set of one over two, three over two, one over three, what ever. Next you take just a few more hairs from the underside of the horse's tail from the side where you first got only one strand. Cross the new hairs over the top of the braid and do two-thirds of another braiding set; thereafter consider the new hairs as part of an existing strand.

Each time you pick up new hairs from opposite sides of the tail. The trick to beautiful tails is to take as few hairs as possible each time. It takes some time to get down to the bottom of the dock where you make a long pigtail, double it under and dew it in place.

And there you are...over the bush...and considerably over the person who's afraid to braid. Your horse looks like a winner, not a doggie dinner.

Board moves against continued 4 x 4ing

The board of supervisors voted yesterday to deny the subdivision of 500 acres of land on the Cachagua Grade by William Hogan, basing their vote on the probability of '4 x 4ing', the consecutive subdivision by subsequent buyers of the lots.

Hogan had asked the subdivision of 500 acres into 12 lots of about 40 acres each, but his map indicated probable densities purchasers may later have created through further subdivision.

Attorney John Joyce of Carmel spoke for Hogan, maintaining the subdivision committee findings under Section 66474 (which indicated possible effects and some environmental findings) were invalid because the board of supervisors had found no need for an environmental impact report.

Mrs. Charmaine Cruchett, a member of the committee, responded, "Apparently Mr. Joyce feels the EIR branch of the planning department is the same as the subdivision committee and their findings the same as ours. It just is not so."

Citing legal precedents, Mrs. Cruchett said the board's responsibility was to consider the potential for additional subdivision and its probable negative effects on the general welfare of the purchasers and the community.

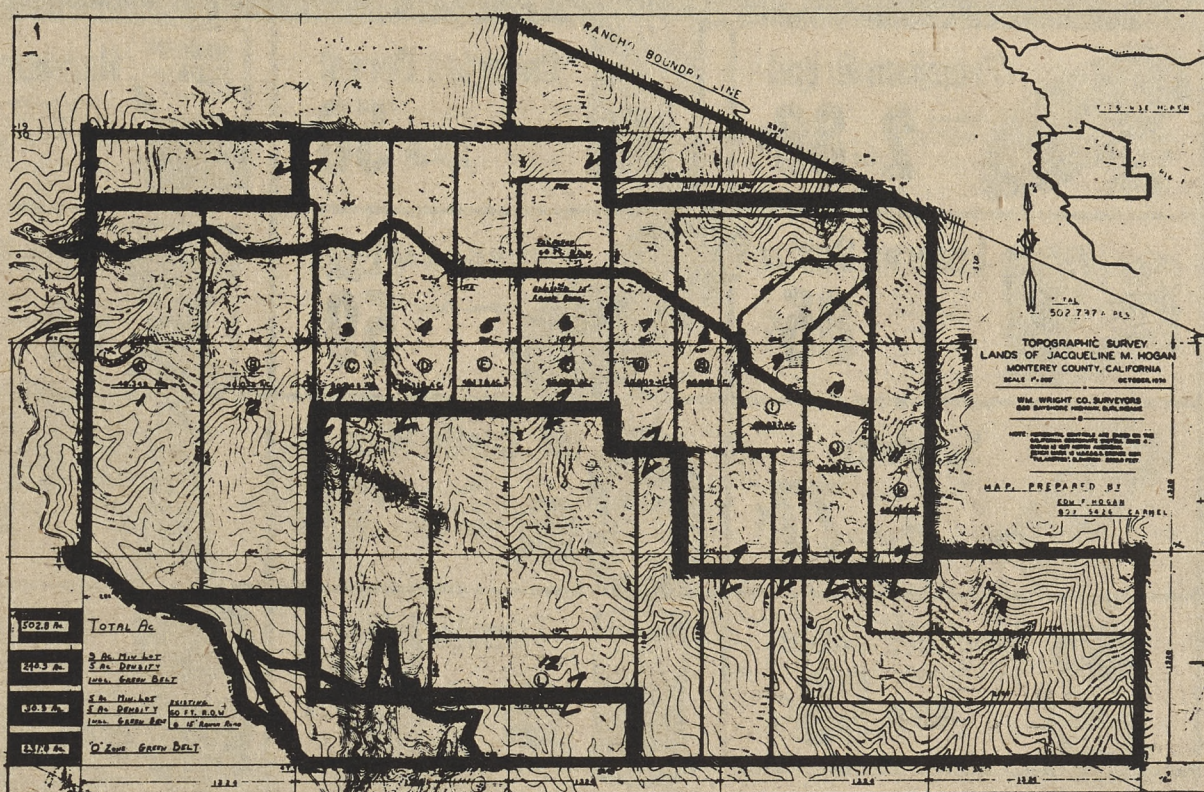

She continued, "It is clear that when an individual division poses problems that would have been solved if it had been offered as part of a standard subdivision, you can legally, rightfully deny that division."

Speaking about the unusually shaped lots, Chairman Roger Poyner said, "Other decisions I have made in my short term of office have come back to haunt me. I can foresee continued gerrymandering in order to achieve necessary density figures. If this continues, to deny a purchaser further division is inevitable."

He continued, "When we look at the five acre zoning in that area, we must remember it was anticipated clustering would occur. It is too wild and beautiful an area to be split up in this manner."

"I refuse to be a party to such blatant 4 x 4ing," he concluded.

The board voted three to one on Supervisor Warren Church's motion to deny the subdivision. Supervisor Dusan Petrovich seconded the motion. Supervisor E.R. Norris was the sole dissenting vote.

Villa Vida

The board voted to continue the Carmel Valley Property Owners Assn. appeal of the Villa Vida use permit until May 13 because of the vacancy of the fifth district seat.

CVPOA board member John Broberg said that in addition to unanswered questions about traffic flow, water supply and sewage disposal, too much had been left to be worked out by the planning department and the developer. "Too much has been taken away from public scrutiny," he said.

Russ Hasley, architect for Dr. Ben Leonard, developer of Villa Vida, said the CVPOA appeal was based on two grounds only; an error in judgment and misuse of discretion. "With these as the basis for appeal, I see no need for the fifth district supervisor to be present to rule on these. Furthermore, it would not be equitable to the developer, who has followed the proper chain of events, to carry this over," he said.

Hannah Davidson, who represented concerned parents in the area of Villa Vida, said, "There has indeed been an error in judgement. I feel strongly we should have a supervisor present who knows Carmel Valley, is familiar with our lifestyle, and particularly is aware of the problems created along Carmel Valley Road."

While Supervisor Norris felt "the developer is entitled to a decision by the board today," Supervisor Petrovich said the length of time until an appointment should be considered. "It is obvious that if the appointment takes months it would be irresponsible to wait that long. But if the appointment is forthcoming within, say, a month, it would not be fair to the citizens of the area," he said.

In addition, Petrovich said, "Other appointments the governor has taken a long time on have still had people doing the job. With a seat vacant and no one representing the fifth district, I'm sure the governor will act speedily to make the board complete again."

Supervisor Church concurred, "With one spot vacant, the board is out of balance. Those who seek this appeal must come up with three votes. A tie vote would deny the appeal."

Ford House program outlined

By LESLIE JOHNSON

Apologizing for a breakdown in communication about the intended use of Children's House (now Ford House), Dr. Gene England, president of Behavioral Sciences Institute, met with a neighborhood group Tuesday night to explain new programs and enlist aid through the community.

Dr. England traced the history of Ford House, from its beginnings as a school for severely mentally retarded children to last summer, when it was not used as a children's institution, but was rented and then sub-rented. Under questioning from the neighbors, Dr. England said he had been unaware of problems of public nudity and gross deterioration of the facility when the house had been rented out.

He assured the group no activities of this type would be allowed under the new program, which was explained by Dr. Douglas Elliott, a clinical psychologist who will administer Ford House.

BSI plans to screen and accept six teenage girls between 12 and 16 years of age who are behind academically because of adjustment problems or difficult home environments. Dr. Elliott said the acceptance program was detailed and was not dependent only on his decision.

"When a referring agency asks us to consider a girl for the program, I will review all available material, including medical, family and academic histories, in addition to any problem she may have had with the law," he said. "If I feel the girl may be appropriate for the program, I will visit with the child in her home environment with any parents she may have. She must have a cooperative attitude and be willing to work within the program."

Dr. Elliott said the group decision was necessary because "we're trying to create a family atmosphere, something that is lacking in most of the girls we are trying to reach."

"In the interest of the program and the girls, it is essential we pick the right girls, young women who can fit into the community. You, the neighbors, are the people they will depend on for some acceptance and consideration as a family unit. The way you feel and respond to the girls and the houseparents will partly determine the success of the program," he said.

Dr. Elliott indicated the program was not intended to be long term custodial, with an average stay envisioned of five to six months. "We're trying to get the girls back into the community, whether they return to their own homes are placed in foster homes," he said.

Dr. England said Mr. and Mrs. Bill Morton of San Juan Bautista had been selected as houseparents and would be taking up residence at Ford House next week. The Mortons, who will receive a joint salary of $10,000, have raised eight children of their own and foster children with adjustment difficulties.

In addition to the houseparents and daily consultation with Dr. Elliott, the girls in Ford House will participate in a private teaching situation through the Carmel Unified School District.

Dr. Richard Hawkins of CUSD explained home teaching would be available to the family unit for three hours a day. "The school district will provide home teaching at the facility. We don't feel it would be proper to bring these young women to the high school or middle school campuses, but there is an educational need the district has a responsibility to meet," he said.

Dr. Hawkins continued, "Additionally we wish to keep the family unit close together so the girls will attend school in the adjacent classroom to their home."

Under questioning from parents in the group, Dr. Hawkins explained home teaching was available to many children with special education requirements. When one mother expressed her feeling that it was unfair for the district to spend an average of $1,300 on most students but $2,000 on these special students, Dr. Hawkins said that any special education student in the district would require about $2,000 to meet its special needs.

Answering questions from the group, Drs. England and Elliott explained that:

- No felony offenders would be considered for the program.
- Heavy drug use or participation in a methadone or other maintenance program would exclude participation in Ford House, but girls would not be excluded on the basis of one-time marijuana use.

- Residents from other school districts would have their education paid for by other school districts, not CUSD.

- Referring agencies would pay up to $750 a month for each child in the program (Referring agencies include the welfare, probation and vocational rehabilitation departments and private doctors and counselors.)

- The Mortons and Dr. Elliott, in addition to BSI, are legally responsible for the children's actions.

- Dr. Elliott will hold group therapy sessions at Ford House four to five times a week, in addition to private sessions and meetings with parents when the child is to be placed in her own home again.

- A recreation volunteer is developing a program for the girls, who will also be expected to take part in housecleaning, meal preparation, sewing, etc.

- Specific rewards and restrictions will be developed by the houseparents, as any parents set limits for their children, Dr. Elliott said. He indicated the young women would be allowed to date under certain circumstances, but that the privilege could be denied. Curfews will be enforced, he said, and no continual parade of traffic from friends would be allowed.

Dr. England said he and Dr. Elliott would be looking into the possibility of establishing a neighborhood advisory council in order to maintain communication lines. "I do want to know what problems you have with the situation," Dr. England said, "But I'd also like to hear about any progress we make."

Mr. and Mrs. Steven Antoncich are at home on Laurel Drive after their wedding in North Hollywood and honeymoon in Las Vegas.

Budinger-Antoncich VOWS

Barbara Suzanne Budinger wore her mother's wedding gown when she became the bride of Steven Phillip Antoncich in a ceremony in March at St. Charles Borromeo Church in North Hollywood.

Mr. and Mrs. Jerome Budinger of North Hollywood are the bride's parents. Mr. and Mrs. Michael Antoncich of Carmel Valley are parents of the groom.

Five members of the bride's family have worn the princess style gown of ivory satin with lace insets, as well as the Florentine lace veil. The bride carried a bouquet of white roses, daisies and lilies of the valley.

Mrs. James Fitzpatrick was matron of honor. Bridesmaids were Paulette Weher, Nancy Hennessey and Nora Sterling. The Budinger family Scotch heritage was reflected in the attendants' gowns of red and blue plaid. The attendants carried bouquets of red roses and babies' breath.

Michael Antoncich III was his brother's best man. Groomsmen included David Isaacson and bride's brothers, Duncan Budinger and Jerome Budinger Jr. Lisa Fawley, niece of the groom, was flower girl, and Christopher Mirkovich was ringbearer.

Honored wedding guests included Mrs. J. F. Jones of Alhambra, the groom's great aunt, Mrs. Robert Budinger, the bride's paternal grandmother, Duncan Shaw, the bride's maternal grandfather, and Mrs. Bettie O'Neal of Carmel Valley, a close family friend.

Following a reception at Casa Vega South, the couple honeymooned at Las Vegas and are at home on Laurel Drive. The bride is a graduate of the University of Southern California who expects to continue her profession in local schools. The groom is a sub-contract house painter.

The groom's parents held a reception at Will's Fargo earlier to introduce their new daughter-in-law to local friends. Grandchildren assisting included Camilla Antoncich, Lisa Fawley and Michael Antoncich IV.

Guests from North Hollywood who enjoyed the black velvet punch and hors d'oeuvres included the bride's parents and brothers, Mr. and Mrs. James Fitzpatrick, and Kathy Mirkovich and Jacqueline Reese.

Other guests included Messrs. and Mmes. Will Faye, Luther Washington, Von King, Al Parker, Johnnie Anderson, Gene Baker, Sydney Crane, Louis Gardner, Alex von Drachenfels, Leon Shappelle, Charlie Allaire, Col. and Mrs. William Taylor, Mmes. Doris Anderson, Beverly McClure, Mae Brussell, Lee Murphy, Bettie O'Neal, Betty Barron, Linda Klemek and Tom O'Campo are making plans for a late summer wedding at Our Lady of Mt. Carmel Church.

Betrothal told

Plans for a late summer wedding were disclosed during a family dinner party on Easter Sunday by Linda Susan Klemek and Thomas William O'Camp. The engagement announcement was made at the Valley home of Mr. and Mrs. Sam Klemek, parents of the bride-to-be.

The bride-to-be graduated from Carmel High School, Monterey Peninsula College and is employed at the Roger R. Post Mortgage Company. Her brothers are Gary, Brad and Sammy.

Tom is the son of Mrs. Ben Ewing of Sacramento and the late Salvatore O'Campo. His sister, Cindy, and brother, Larry reside in Carmel Valley. A Carmel High School graduate, he attends Monterey Peninsula College.

The couple plan a wedding by candlelight on August 16th at Our Lady of Mount Carmel Catholic Church.

Good friends all over the Peninsula are making appointments to get together on Saturday and Sunday at the Carmel High School Scholarship Bargain Fair. Best friends who will be attending are Mrs. Janet

League opening day

The Carmel Valley Little League Opening Day Ceremonies are scheduled for Saturday, April 19, not April 12 as incorrectly reported in last week's Outlook. The first games of the 1975 season will be played at the Paso Hondo Field this Saturday.

The program will be held from 12 to 1 p.m. and include the presentation of team banners from representatives of the Salinas Packers Team.

All members, coaches, and manager of both farm and major teams are asked to be at the Field in uniform by 11:30.

"The Falcons," a sixth major league team was formed last week. Ralph Badour has taken the new team to be sponsored by Bob Miller of Thinker Toys in Carmel. Jim Lester replaces Badour as coach of the farm team, "Cubs."

"Falcons" selected in the initial draft were Marcus Arana, Keith Moore, Garth Hattan, Kerry Winslow, Perry Belmont, Brady Gray, Eric Mello, and Tracy Parks. Additional players will be named at a later date or a "taxi squad" from the minors may be utilized.

The season is of ten weeks duration with seven games scheduled for the first half and eight for the second.

Auction a success

Augie Acuna, chairman of the Champagne Silent Auction, and fellow board members greeted between two and three hundred guests who braved the storm Saturday evening to sip champagne while bidding and browsing among the many donations at Hidden Valley Music Seminars at the annual Carmel Community Youth Center benefit.

It was a co-operative community spirited fund-raise, since the board of directors themselves represent the CV Lions, Kiwanis, Fire Department, Women's Club, and Rotary.

Hosts and hostesses assisting them were Mr. and Mrs. Herb Reuter of Tularcitos Parents Club, Dr. and Mrs. Dale Buche of CV Little League, Mr. and Mrs. Lloyd Swanson of the 4-H Clubs, Mr. and Mrs. Roger Sherman of the Carmel High Boosters Club, Mr. and Mrs. John Conklin of the Carmel Barracuda Swim and Diving Team Boosters Club, and Mr. and Mrs. Richard King of the Girl Scouts.

A real live playboy bunny did appear in the person of Beth Thorsen of the MPC Clownology-Comedy workshop and a group of Salinas artists set-up a surprise art exhibit in the Hidden Valley Lounge.

The board members all expressed sincere thanks to Hidden Valley, the donors, the guests, and the workers, who contributed to the success of the benefit.

Fair cancelled

Because of a lack of volunteer help, it was the decision of the Tularcitos Parent Club board to postpone the "International Fair" scheduled for April 20 until a date in the fall.

'Dear Earthlings' entertains

By JEFF HUDELSON

Congratulations are in order for Joan Cobb Hopkins' finely scored musical fantasy, "Dear Earthlings." Attentive audiences were well entertained by this original work, and, while the script was not without fault and the production was unpolished, the final result was not an unpleasant one.

Based on the "Sleeping Beauty" fairy tale, this children's musical (book, lyrics, and music by Mrs. Hopkins of Carmel Valley) played two matinee performances this past weekend on MPC's main stage. Yet, while many fine things will be said of this production, it was uneven and did not do full justice to the script.

Mrs. Hopkins imaginatively uses a classic chorus, not only to provide a prologue and epilogue, but as a means of describing off-stage action. This chorus of Cleo (well-played and strongly sung by Linda D. Sparks) and Theo (Curtis Bridgforth-vocally much stronger on Sunday) could possible have been used to greater advantage if they had been given lines to cover the overly long scene (costume) changes.

The knowledge of how to cover production difficulties such as this can come only through experience. Thankfully, an aspiring composer-playwright is being allowed this opportunity. Bravo!

Hopefully, she will give us more original scripts.

Instrumental in advancing the plot, the Queen (Debbie Rye) and King (Paul Wood) speak primarily in rhymed verse. Unfortunately, most of these rhymes are in quick couplets, which can soon become tiresome. However, when, as in "Tell Me" (sung by the lyric Carole Moreland and handsome Michael C. King), a more complex (ababcedd) rhyme scheme is used, the result is felicitous.

The score is highlighted by "Tonic That's Bionic" and "Flower Power" by the Chorus of Trees (a fine and versatile group: Aleasha Anderson, Lola Bindel, Richard Brace, Leslie Johnson, Stan Kasguba, Teresa Kitcher, George Peterson, Sharon Wagner, Julie Wellborn, and Bobbie Whipple); Moreland's "The Spinning Weel;" and "Zoombadee-Zah" and "Nasty Needle" by Gertrude Snyder's marvelously evil Zorina.

Also very well sung were Sherrie Coleman's two Hilologic numbers, "Boomerang," and Mr. King's "How I Wish." Nevertheless, the most interesting number in the show was the imaginative dance of the Fairy Sisters by Lola Bindel and Julie Wellborn. Unfortunately, the attempt of another actor to ad lib somewhat spoiled this lovely number on Sunday.

When mention is made of production problems, please exempt the band. Playing everything from blues to waltzes to rock, they manage to support, not drown out, the singers and the play. Bobby Buccelli (piano), Verne Battig (bass), Larry Plotkin (drums), and Cliff Lemon (guitar) deserve a great deal of credit for the show's fine reception. So does Paul Wood's flute.

However, there were problems. Visually it was a very difficult production. The costume colors were violets, lavenders, oranges, and various greens. These are very difficult colors to light on stage and Elliot's gel selections did little to help the problem. Also, all too often actors were performing in unlit areas and moving across the stage as if negotiating an obstacle course.

The cast, though charming, was inexperienced and, therefore, a little slow on cues. Also annoying was the fact that some of the singers used "mikes" to amplify their voices unnecessarily.

Notwithstanding these imperfections, "Dear Earthlings" was a success and certainly entertained audiences. The Peninsula should be pleased that we may call Mrs. Hopkins our own.

'Don Juan' enjoyable

By LESLIE JOHNSON

How completely unfortunate few people have yet been to see "Don Juan in Hell," G.B. Shaw's dramatic reading performed at the Forest Theatre in the Ground. A benefit for the CET Scholarship Fund, the reading is an interval of entertainment and reflection that is entirely enjoyable.

Marcia Gambrell Hovick portrays Dona Ana, Royston Brunst is Don Juan, Miles Heberer has the role of the commander (all characters drawn from the comic opera Don Giovanni), and James Goffard is the Devil.

Each of the performers is outstanding. Veterans of the stage, their presence and personality keep Shaw's interminable philosophizing from becoming too tedious.

Miss Hovick's portrayal of Dona Ana becomes, as Shaw intended, all "virtuous" women, all those misguided females who believe mere constancy and periodic piety will assure them a place in heaven. Ana never realizes what we think we want and what we really want are two different things. The superficial search for a "religious life" is exposed through her to be the self-serving role it often, though not always, is.

Brunst's examination of Shaw's interpretation of Don Juan is incisive. As he reads and the character decides he will elect Heaven rather than remain in Hell, the audience is carried along. The lengthy speeches of this character could easily lose the audience, but Brunst has carefully paced his presentation. His Don Juan has seen the best and the worst of life and of eternity and has made a choice between reality, which may or may not include love, and the dream world of Hell, where Love and Beauty are the topic of the day-every day.

Goffard's Devil is delightfully satanic, just enough of our good old stereotypical Lucifer with a deadly comic touch. Well-suited physically for the role, Goffard takes advantage of the large role to react largely to the other actors.

Goffard and Heberer play well off each other and Heberer's Commander is a delightful comic break. Past the stuffiness he indulged in while living, the Commander, who like the earthly response to his statue so well that is the form he has assumed, allows himself to be swayed, concedes to boredom and relishes grand speech. His honesty in choosing Hell is refreshing, and the refreshment comes as much from Heberer's interpretation as from Shaw's characterization.

References to events in the opera are clarified by program notes. Naturally, Shaw included excerpts from Mozart's score at appropriate intervals. The quartet broke the reading into two reasonable acts and were back into the flow of the piece after the intermission in two sentences. Costuming is effective, lighting subtle, set suitable.

Surely the various benefit auctions Saturday across the Peninsula accounted for the small house. Expect larger audiences for this interesting performance at Forest Theatre in the Ground through this month.

Riverwood condominiums sold out of bankruptcy

Riverwood, a large condominium development at the south east corner of the Carmel Valley, is in the process of changing hands. A portion of the development has been sold to its beneficiaries and a notice of default has been filed in Salinas on other parts of the project which remain in the hands of its original developer.

Development of the 15-acre tract into a complex of 89 individual condominium units has been planned since 1968. Thomas Gamboa, a developer from Palo Alto was granted a change in zoning for the project from the county board of supervisors over protestations from Carmel city officials a local citizens' groups.

In the summer of 1974, construction halted on Riverwood Number One, the initial phase of the development. Forty-three condominium units had been completed, and by December 15 of those units had been sold and occupied. Recreational facilities, including tennis courts and a swimming pool, which had been promised the Riverwood residents, had not been constructed and substantive doubts were thrown on the prospect of those facilities being installed.

A list of more than 50 liens from contractors were filed against the developer. They included unpaid bills on electrical work, carpet installation, telephone installation, and other services.

In addition, the tract adjoining Riverwood Number One was excavated for the construction of 46 similar units. To date, that excavated tract remains idle.

At a trustee sale, held on March 20, title to the 28 completed but unsold units in the development was transferred to Gamboa's beneficiary, or principal lending agency, the Securities Intermountain Company of Portland, Oregon.

The second phase of the development, on which a notice of default was filed in October, remains in Gamboa's hands.

Sources close to the Riverwood development view last month's trustee sale optimistically. One Riverwood condominium owner related a report that the Securities Intermountain Company would transfer development responsibilities to another agency, and put sufficient funds into the project to complete the long awaited recreational facilities within the next few months.

Bay School permit issued

The Carmel school board was granted permit approval to reconstruct Bay School on Monday by the Central Coast Regional Commission of the coastal commission.

However, indications are that the project will be stalled for at least another month pending an appeal to the state board of the coastal commission.

Monterey attorney Tom Hudson, who has launched a campaign to block the project, said he would "definitely appeal" the regional commission's decision. Hudson, the owner of property stretching southeast from the site of the old schoolhouse on San Jose Creek State Beach, expressed determined opposition to the plan by which the 100-year-old building will be demolished and a replica constructed in its place to house the Bay School nursery program.

"We've not yet begun to fight," he exclaimed. After repeatedly arguing before the school board and the coastal commission that the old building should be saved as a historic landmark, and suggesting that it could be maintained by the Monterey County Foundation for Conservation, Hudson stated this week, "If it goes through the state I'll file a taxpayers suit."

Permit approval by the regional commission carried one condition, described by a member of the Santa Cruz staff as "a good faith gesture" to provide for preservation of the structure if possible. The school board will be required to make the 100-year-old schoolhouse available for removal from the site for a period of at least three weeks.

The school district application to the regional commission was passed on a 10 to 2 vote. Two Carmel area coastal commission representatives, Victoria Gibson and Ruth Anderson, abstained from voting on the issue. Both had made personal contributions to a fund raising drive, undertaken by a group of Bay School parents and other supporters of the project, to assist the school board in financing the reconstruction plan.

The board has planned to relocate Bay School classroom activities in Woods School for the completion of the current school year once reconstruction of the old facility begins.

Build the Earth explores nuclear energy

by LESLIE JOHNSON

"Centering our pin is a picture from the moon of the planet earth, for our whole concern is for the whole earth. Surrounding it is the rainbow -- first God's promise to man never again to destroy the earth, now man's promise to God to rebuild the earth."

Worn by women from the Bay Area visiting in Monterey County homes this week, the pin is appearing on the lapels of more Carmel Valley women who are beginning involvement in a new women's movement -- Woman to Woman Building the Earth for the Children's Sake (Build the Earth, for conversational convenience).

With a motto from Matthew Arnold ("If ever the world sees a time when women shall come together purely and simply for the benefit of mankind, it will be a power such as the world has never known.") Build the Earth is an educational organization of women who are concerned about the physical, psychological and spiritual atmosphere of the planet. Several women from Palo Alto were in Monterey County this week preparing for a multi-media presentation at 3:30 and 8 p.m. April 18 at Lecture Forum 103 of Monterey Peninsula College. While here, they held a coffee at the Tierra Grande home of Joyce Mayers.

Mrs. Jan Lawrence prefaced the morning coffee by saying, "We are concerned about life on this planet for our children and for your children. When you look at the earth from outer space, you see it is one system. There are no lines showing Kansas pink."

Mrs. Lawrence explained that while the group was concerned about overpopulation, starvation, war and other critical issues, questions and answers about nuclear energy were crucial, especially in consideration of sitings of nuclear plants in California.

Mrs. Grace Keitzman began, "I remember, as most of you probably do, when the first atom bomb was detonated over Nagasaki and the destruction and desolation which resulted. I also recall when Eisenhower began Atoms for Peace and how wonderful it all seemed at that time. But now we must answer vital questions about nuclear energy and its role in the world's changing fuel cycle."

After tracing the cycle of uranium from mine to refinement to use in nuclear reactors, Mrs. Keitzman raised one of the first concerns of Build the Earth -- disposal and security of nuclear radioactive wastes.

Mrs. Keitzman explained that plutonium, the major waste product of uranium nuclear fission, is a trace element in nature, but that in even slightly concentrated amounts is extremely toxic. "Plutonium has been called the most lethal poison ever produced," she said.

Mrs. Keitzman illustrated this by explaining that if a gram of plutonium, which is about the size of an aspirin, were crushed and .001 of it inhaled, the person breathing the plutonium would be dead within two to three weeks.

She also said it takes only a piece of plutonium the size of a grapefruit to construct a bomb with the destructive power of the first atom bomb. An additional danger of plutonium, she said, is its extremely long active life. Mrs. Keitzman said plutonium remains radioactive for at least 500,000 years.

Members of Build the Earth pointed out that plutonium can be a useful by-product of the nuclear fuel cycle, for it can be used in fast breeder reactors where uranium cannot. In addition, when the world's supply of uranium is used up, plutonium will be the product.

Mrs. Judie Rodda told the group, "It is safe to say no scientist anywhere will tell you there is a safe way to store plutonium."

Waste product plutonium from existing nuclear plants is stored in holding tanks, the women said. For there are no working reprocessing plants in existence at this time. Mrs. Rodda said one plant had been working in the late 60s in New York, but was shut down in 1972 for safety measures. It is scheduled to reopen in 1977, she said.

Simply having reprocessing plants available for the plutonium is not enough, the women said, for the hazards of transporting the lethal substance are great.

Mrs. Rodda said, "Last year, there were 400 instances of sabotage against utilities and the government. So far, none of the sabotage has been directed against nuclear plants, but how long can we expect this to last?"

Mrs. Jane Foglesong reminded the women of a recent PBS special based on the experience of an undergraduate physics student who, through research of materials generally available to the public, designed a nuclear bomb with commonplace mechanisms--only the plutonium would have to be stolen. The student whose research was the basis for the film has gone underground, she said, through fear of kidnapping by a terrorist group.

Build the Earth supporters are currently obtaining signatures on a petition to Gov. Edmund G. Brown urging him to call for California's atomic commission report by January of 1976, instead of waiting until late 1977 for a comprehensive analysis of the nuclear situation in the state.

The women believe that an unbiased report outlining questions and any available answers could be a useful tool in convincing legislators to rebudget research monies toward other alternatives for energy sources.

Mrs. Rodda pointed out, "Nine times more is spent on nuclear energy as for geothermal, solar system energy, wind, water and tides combined. If some of the money were swung in directions other than nuclear energy, some of these other alternatives would probably appear feasible as well."

In addition, the women hope to help re-educate the public on energy use and to promote programs which decrease general consumption.

Mrs. Mayers said, "If we would simply refuse to buy overpackaged goods, manufacturers would stop overpackaging and the resultant energy savings would be astounding."

Mrs. Foglesong added, "If the United States would start a nation-wide insulation program at the rate of two per cent of all dwellings a year, by 1985, America would have reduced her energy consumption by 25 per cent."

Liz Ruch, one of the women in attendance, said part of the solution was the education of children. "Most of us grew up with parents who came through the Depression who wanted us to have everything they hadn't had. In my house, Mom was so grateful for all the heat, we could have run around in slippers and just turned the heat up," she said. "Today, I put slippers and wool bathrobes on my kid, and if he says he's not warm enough during the day, he puts on a sweater."

Mrs. Keitzman continued, "Part of the push for nuclear power plants is on the part of utilities, naturally, who go to the government and say 'All our customers need energy now.' If we reduce our consumption, they will no longer be so pressed to utilize nuclear energy."

The women of Build the Earth believe as an initiative group their voice will mean a lot in the statehouse and in Washington. Mrs. Keitzman concluded, "In 1949, Einstein said America had to take the issue of nuclear energy to the Village square. Our voice is rising now from that square, and we will be heard."

Poster contest

The Poster Contest sponsored by the Carmel Valley Garden Association for Tulareitos third, fourth and fifth grade students is in full swing and parents should remind their children that the deadline for entries is April 18 at Tulareitos.

Printing (large), originality and neatness are stressed by the judges with a first, second, and third place prize to be awarded at each grade level. Winners will be announced Monday, April 21 and posters will then be displayed in shops throughout the Valley.

The purpose of the contest is to encourage all children to compete for silver dollars in the Junior Arrangement division of the Flower Show scheduled for May 10 and 11 at Tulareitos Multipurpose room.

Mrs. Richard Klingensmith, chairman of the contest, explains that materials for the entries may be obtained through the Art instructor, Bob Skiles.

Women's Club

California, Arizona, and Hawaii fashions were featured at the benefit fashion show sponsored last week at the Community Center by the Carmel Valley Women's Club.

Barbara Proctor, commentator, stressed the present trend to quality in women's wear, the importance of wearing hats for accent, and the "just below the knee" length as suitable for most women today.

Doris Bundgard, vice-president, and hostess of the affair, presented door prizes from the following merchants: Marzi Pottery, Steinmetz Pharmacy, The Tuck Box, Village House and Hardware, In and Outdoor Shop, Bowers Pharmacy, and Oleander Shop. Winners were Elaine Broiles, Billie Anker, Isabella Trystan, Virginia Hanna, Olene Dick, Annabel Anrell, Aurie Gray, Florence Dickinson, Nancy Tolan, Verel Robbins, Dee Aldridge, and Mary Brashears.

The buffet salad table was centered with an arrangement by Olene Dick of pale pink camellias in a silver bowl. Orell O'Hartnett served as general chairman, assisted by Marilyn von Berg and Louis Koenig. Tables were decorated with dark pink camellias and ferns.

The next meeting of the group will be May 7 at the Naval Postgraduate School. Luncheon will be served and entertainment will be a presentation by the Naval Postgraduate School Little Theater group of selections from their new production of "Gigi." Reservations are to be made with Vera Stokes at 659-4286 prior to May 5.

Carolyn Walker-- AFS girl back from tour

By CHRIS KELLER

Before Carolyn Walker, a Carmel High School student, arrived at her new home in Johore Bahru, Malaysia, her Chinese family had to rid the home of a pesky snake that had wandered inside. To capture the serpent the Th'ng family used the age-old method of offering the snake a bamboo stick, which according to legend is the mother of the snake. The snake obligingly wrapped itself around the bamboo and was carried outdoors to be dumped in the river.

The snake's visit, however, was very significant.

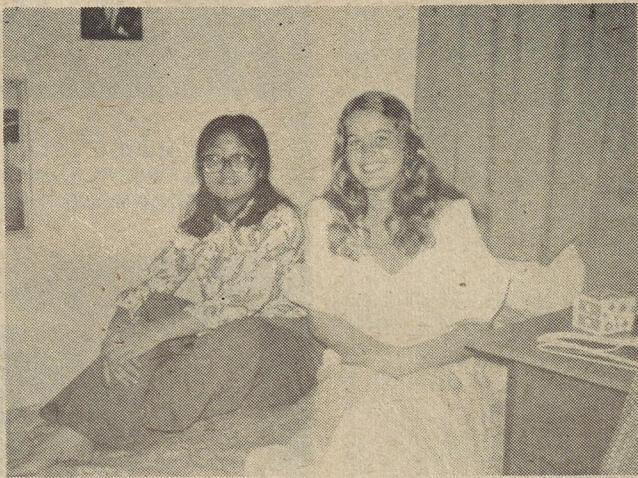

"When I got to my Malaysian home," explained Carolyn in an interview last week, "I was told that a snake in the house was a good omen and would mean I would have a happy stay."

Apparently the omen was right because Carolyn has just returned to her own home and family in Carmel, happy and exuberant about her one year stay in Malaysia and her experience as an American Field Service exchange student.

Carolyn was chosen to be an AFS representative to Johore Bahru, Malaysia in March of 1974. She lived with the Chinese family of Th'ng Hong Kee -- a family that included thirteen children, two wives, and a host of relatives. She was closest, however, to "sister" Mui Sim, age 18, and Charlie, her 19 year old "brother." She found the young people could speak to her in English, but the older people only spoke Teochew, a Chinese dialect.

"The Malaysian population is really varied," explained Carolyn. "There is a combination of Malays, who comprise about 48 percent of the population, Chinese, who make up about 38 percent, and Indians, Eurasians, Ibans, Dyaks, and others who make up the rest."

Her "father" was head of a Buddhist temple and Carolyn learned a lot about both Taoism and Confucianism. The family made regular monthly visits to the temple on festival days.

There was a lot to adjust to in the first few weeks after her arrival. She learned not to wear her shoes in the house, to never use just her left hand, or extend her hand palm up. She learned to like hot spicy food.

"Rice is the staple food, but they eat a lot of chilies which take some getting used to. They also eat Indian curries. But once you get used to them they're delicious," she said.

"We ate with chopsticks all the time. In fact, at the little girl's birthday party one of the games was to see who could transfer the marbles from one rice bowl to another the most quickly -- using chopsticks."

As far as school in Malaysia, Carolyn says it was very different, and much more restrictive than at Carmel High. Her classes included history of South-East Asia, geography of SEA, economics, English, Malay literature and math.

"There were no choices there at all as to what classes you took," she said.

One of her most interesting experiences was breakfast with the 80-year-old Sultan of Johore. "We have a close family friend in Pebble Beach, Alton Walker, who met the same Sultan, then a prince, in 1937. The two of them talked about cars," explained Carolyn.

So when Carolyn was settled in Johore, she dropped around at the palace and left her name and her friend's name. No sooner had she done that than the telephone rang.

"It was the Sultan's secretary who said, 'His Royal Highness would like to have breakfast with you,'" said Carolyn. She did have breakfast with the Sultan and he did claim to remember the Walker's Pebble Beach friend.

"He talked the whole time, asking questions about current events. He wanted to know what I thought about Patricia Hearst and President Ford. He also asked about John Paul Getty's grandson."

The Sultan also gave Carolyn a tour of the palace, which was replete with antique Chinese furnishings of rosewood and mother of pearl. Outside his bedroom window was a huge aviary filled with birds from all over the world. He also showed her the cages where he kept the giant pythons.

Overall, Carolyn feels the best part of her Malaysian experience was the close relationship that developed between herself and her host family. "In the two weeks I've been back they've already written three letters," she said.

Carolyn will be entering the University of California at Berkeley in the fall. For those interested in seeing slides she took during the year abroad, there will be a showing in the library of Carmel High School April 16 at 7:30 p.m.
